Dear Mother:-

Your letter came yesterday, and this morning I cashed the check and paid some bills. Thank you very much for sending the money so soon; I certainly had good use for it. I went from the bank to the place where I had my two papers typed and there paid a bill of $14.75. This also includes a book I bought from him second hand. Then I went to the Lunch Counter, where they have been trusting me for a meal ~~XXXX~~ ticket since the middle of last week. That was $5 more, and so it goes.

The underwear you sent was fine. Thanks very much. I haven't found out who Eddy had up yet, but I'm sure it wasn't Bobby Shai, or he certainly would have brought up to see me at the house. I will ask him the next time I see him. I had a letter from Jake the other day. He is worried about his grades; they aren't coming out as well as he hoped, and he doesn't know what he will do for funds. I imagine he will get along all right though.

The Carnival party proved a great success. Alma arrived Saturday afternoon, and we had a swell time. A buffet supper was served at the house Saturday evening, the first we ever tried. One of the local restaurants sent cold meats of all kinds, cheeses, salads, olives, pickels, coffee and cup cakes and other items too numerous to mention, as they say on the sale signs. Pinky left early Sunday afternoon, and I wet to bed early Sunday night, much needing a little rest. The party was not very expensive for me, considering what it costs some people. It wasn't over $15, I'm sure, and that is quite moderate. I heard a couple of fellows talking in the drug store after the girls had gone. One said, "I got out of the party pretty cheaply. I only spent $17.!" The other replied, "Why, I spent $20 on liquor alone." So you see how it goes. You can spend any amount you like. It's not unusual to spend $50 or so, and one fellow I heard of spent $100. O well.

I went over and got application blanks for the Dartmouth graduate fellowships. I will have to get all of them fixed up in about a week, so I will have to keep after it. The grades will be out the end of this week, so that I will be able to send in a copy of my first semester marks. As I said before, I don't know whether they will do more harm than good or not.

Well, dear, I will have to cut this off, as I have an appointment at this time. I hope you folks are all well. Give my love to all, and especially Aunt Marie and Betty when you next see them.

Much love,
